Introduction

Saskatchewan Missing Persons

There are currently 112 long term missing persons in Saskatchewan. Long-term refers to those individuals who have been reported as missing for a period of six months or longer. The current number of 112 does not accurately reflect the total number of missing persons in Saskatchewan as there are many missing persons throughout the province that have been reported missing for less than six months. This number does not take into account the number of unreported missing persons as this is an unknown variable.

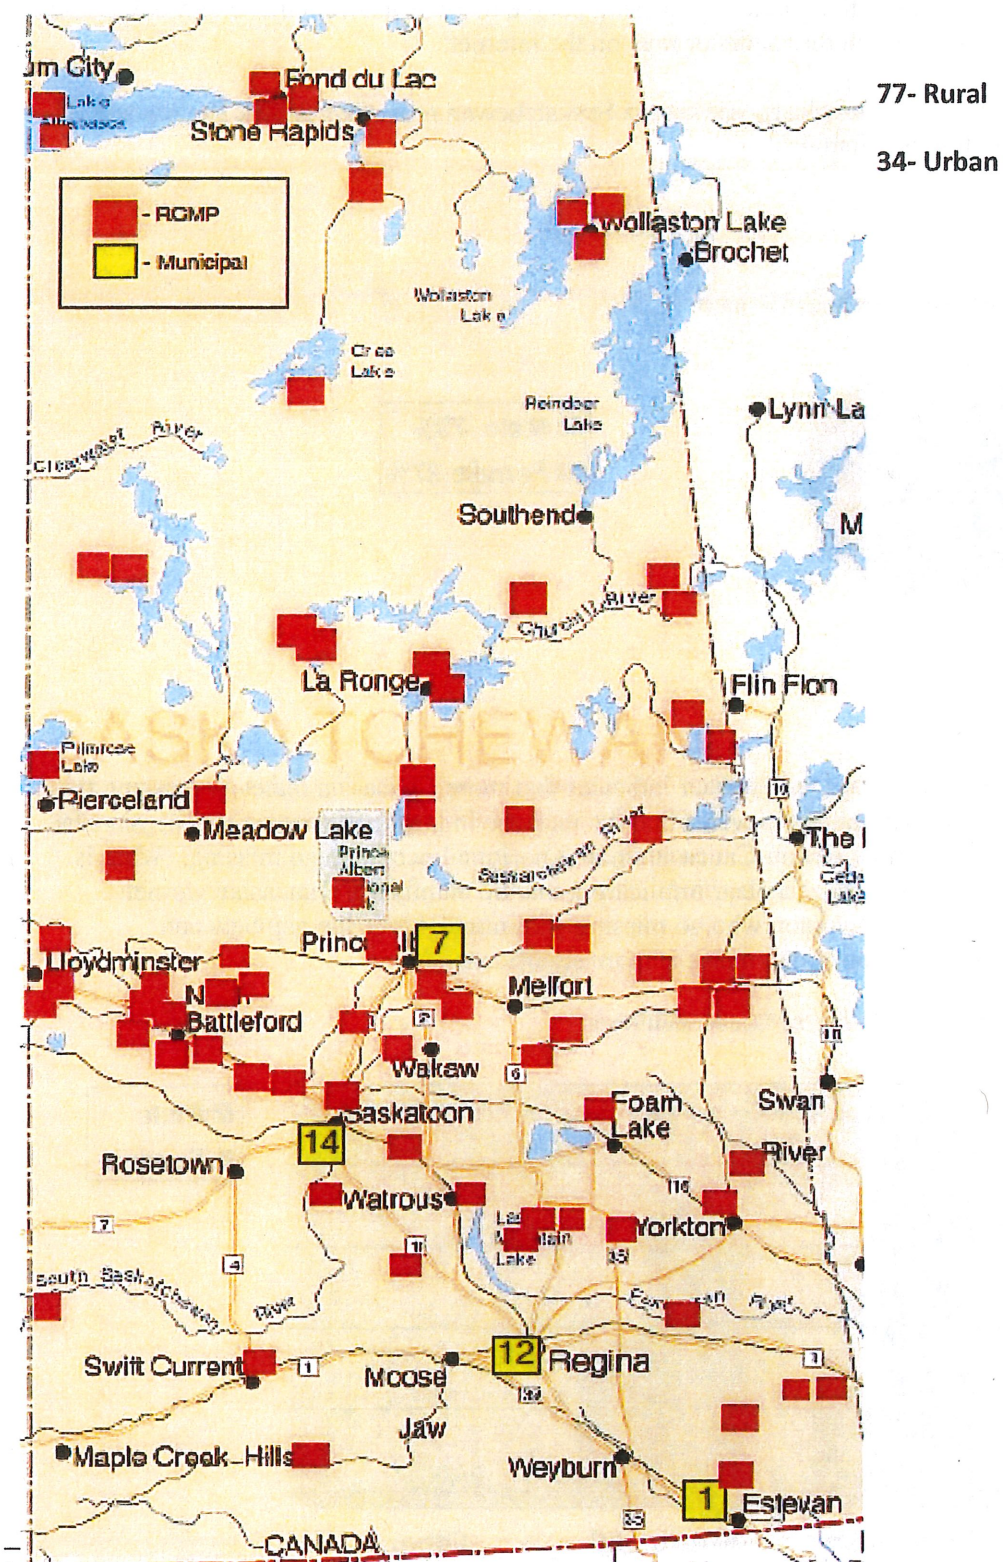

It is difficult to determine the exact number of recent (under 6 months) missing persons in Saskatchewan as these recent reports do not indicate which instances involved chronic runaways, walk-aways or that are suspicious in nature. Chronic runaways are those individuals who have repeatedly runaway and there is a documented history with law enforcement. Walk-aways are those people who are transient and have a history of leaving for periods of time without notifying friends and family. As Victim Services does not have the capacity to focus support services for families of all the runaways or walk-aways that are reported every month across the province, the focus will target those missing persons who fall into the criteria outlined in the Missing Persons – Police Referrals to Victim Services in Saskatchewan Protocol.

When individuals have been missing for six months, information on the circumstances surrounding the disappearance is added to the Saskatchewan Association for Chiefs of Police website (sacp.ca). This website provides details about the missing person (vital stats and last point of contact), law enforcement contact information for each individual investigation and statistics on Saskatchewan Missing Persons. The following information can be found on the SACP website and is updated periodically.

Saskatchewan Statistics on Missing Persons

As previously stated, at the date of this writing, there were 112 long term missing persons in Saskatchewan. These are historical cold cases dating back to 1934. It is a misconception that most people go missing from urban areas. As seen on the map below, more than double the amount of missing persons are from rural areas.

¹ Not updated to current statistical data at time of writing

The following charts and graphs depict Saskatchewan missing persons by gender, race and age. This provides us with a picture of missing people in Saskatchewan that is more accurate than what we may hear in the media or read on the internet.

In figure 2, below, we can clearly see that in Saskatchewan more than double the amount of males are missing than females.

In figure 3, a picture of race and gender indicates that more Caucasian males go missing than any other race. This graph also reveals that the increase in immigration over recent years has not increased the number of non-Caucasian/non-Aboriginal people to go missing. What is significant about this graph is a clear implication that the number of Caucasian women compared to Aboriginal women who go missing is minimal, while the gap between Caucasian males and Aboriginal males is more significant.

Trends in missing persons can be seen in figure 4. By the sharp spikes we can see that males are more likely to go missing in their 20's, 30's and 50's while females are most likely to go missing in their 20's. The male population varies greatly by age whereas the female population seems to only differ during early adulthood.

Why People Go Missing

There are four main reasons people go missing. Those reasons are: Choice; Accidental/Sudden Death; Abduction; Foul Play.

Voluntary

When people go missing by choice it means they have made a decision to begin their life anew somewhere else. This means cutting off all contact with family and friends and walking away from the current lifestyle. Due to the costs of beginning a new life somewhere else, this form of disappearance is more often completed by Caucasian males who have the financial means and resources. Some people suffering mental health issues may complete suicide in remote locations leading to a long search before they are located.

Injured/Lost

When people go missing due to being injured/lost it means just that. Usually this occurs in secluded or remote areas and very few people, if any know exactly where the missing person had gone. This type of disappearance can be related to an accident after an activity or to a physical ailment during an activity. Children and Senior citizens suffering from a form of dementia are most likely to disappear under these circumstances.

Abduction

Abduction is a common reason children go missing. Parental abductions are most common and in most cases there is no cause to worry that child is in danger. Stranger abductions are very rare. These cases are most life threatening. Whether parental or stranger abduction, if criteria are met, Amber Alerts may be issued in hopes that the public can assist in locating the child safely.

Suspicious Means

Suspicious means is the generalized reason behind some missing men and women. Although men do go missing under this category, most female disappearances are suspicious. Females in situations of domestic violence or living in vulnerable lifestyles, such as the sex trade or addictions, are the most likely victims. Across Canada aboriginal women are more likely to disappear due to suspicious means than any other reason.

The examples given above are not meant to be an exhaustive list of who can fall victim under each type of disappearance category. It is more a statistical guideline to give the support worker an idea of the overall picture of Saskatchewan missing persons.

Families of Missing Persons

Families of missing persons are experiencing a traumatic incident when a loved one goes missing. The circumstances around the disappearance play a significant factor into what the immediate and short term needs of the families will be. There are five key areas that families will experience a need. How those needs are met will be determined by the personal support network, financial status and requests made by the family.

The five key areas are: Ambiguous Loss; Supporting Hope; Investigative Process; Media Assistance and Financial Issues. These needs categories are not all inclusive of the needs families experience however are a common factor between all families of missing persons.

Ambiguous Loss

Ambiguous loss is the physical absence yet psychological presence of a person. This form of loss is very different from the type grief experienced from a death. There is no definitive end to this type of loss. It will continue until the missing person is located.

As the support worker, it may be difficult to locate counseling services specific to ambiguous loss. It is important to contact your local agencies to see if anyone is qualified to assist the family. There are plans to have specialized counseling services for this type of loss.

Supporting Hope

Families will experience different forms of hope throughout the missing persons process. Hope can be for many things. There is hope the missing will be located safe and returned home. As time passes hope may change to that of hope the missing person's remains will be recovered so that family can give him/her a 'proper' burial. The hope may revolve around the family finding a new way to function and continue on without the missing person present. It could mean hope that the children of a missing parent will grow up to know what a loved person their parent was.

It is important for the support worker to understand that every member of the family may be in a different stage of hope. It will be vital to identify what is available in your community to support hope (vigils, awareness walks) and what small things you can suggest to the family to encourage them to maintain hope (seat of honor for the missing at family functions, birthday cakes for the missing person, a light kept on etc).

Investigative Process

Families of missing persons are depending on law enforcement to locate their loved one. It is very important to keep the family regularly updated on the investigation and to create a regular contact schedule with the family. The most important thing is to understand the fear that as time passes, their loved one will be forgotten. Maintaining contact and scheduling family meetings with investigators will assist the family in knowing that the investigation is continuing and that law enforcement is still actively pursuing leads that develop regarding the missing person.

As the support worker it will be important to monitor frustration levels the family may experience. There are differences between searching for a child and searching for an adult. Adult missing persons investigations are much more complex and legal maneuverings become a necessity as personal and confidential information needs to be accessed by officers. Families may become frustrated at the amount of time it takes for investigators to get legal access to these areas and the support worker must be able to find ways to diffuse these frustrations before they reach explosive levels risking the communication relationship developed between the family and investigators.

Media Assistance

The media can be a great asset to families searching for someone. They can provide information to mass populations via print and online very quickly. When the media works with the family, within the boundaries of the family's comfort levels and reports the information in a respectful and factual manner the family has a positive experience.

There are situations where the media crosses the boundaries the family is comfortable with and as the support worker it is important to discuss media relationships with family. Allowing the family insight into options when dealing with the media can afford them a sense of control in a situation they have very little control of.

Financial Issues

Depending on the socioeconomic lifestyle of the missing person, there can be many financial issues that arise over a period of time. These issues will depend on the immediate family makeup, employment, property and estate issues of the missing person.

The support worker will need to discuss financial issues throughout the investigation and provide some guidance on what the family can do to handle the financial affairs of the missing person.

This is a brief overview of the unique needs facing families of missing persons. Support workers are not expected to know every aspect of each area but rather, are expected to be able to provide information on how, where or when a family can receive assistance dealing with the above issues. This guide will provide some insight on which areas the support worker can address directly and which issues may need an outside source for assistance.

Who Is a Missing Person?

In general, a missing person is anyone whose whereabouts are unknown and there is someone concerned for his/her safety. This general definition encompasses every type of missing person circumstance and due to the high number of chronic adolescent runaways, people living transient lifestyles and volatile divorce/custody disputes, it is necessary to refine this definition into a more specific category.

Saskatchewan Chiefs of Police and Ministry of Justice Victim Services have developed a protocol that investigators will refer to when deciding to refer a missing person investigation to Victim Services.¹ The protocol is as follows:

In accordance to the Missing Persons – Police Referrals to Victim Services in Saskatchewan Protocol, the missing persons case will be:

- Suspicious or unusual in nature
- Involve Major Crime Unit investigation
- Require Search and Rescue
- Have distraught family/involved persons that need support
- Have a family/involved person who requests help from Victim Services

It is important to discuss the protocol with your law enforcement agency to ensure investigators are aware of this protocol.

¹ This protocol was developed in response to recommendation 13 from the Final Report of the Provincial Partnership Committee on Missing Persons, by a working committee comprised of police, Victim Services coordinators, and Victims Services Branch (Saskatchewan Ministry of Justice and Attorney General). Approved by the Saskatchewan Association of Chiefs of Police and the Saskatchewan Association of Police Affiliated Victim Services Inc., in April 2010.

Who is the Client?

Mainstream victim services files have a clear indicator of who the client will be, the victim of the crime committed or the victim of the trauma incurred. Missing Persons files are not so clear and concise. While the missing person may or may not be a victim of a crime, the missing person is not the client. The support worker will offer support services to family members and/or friends who indicate they would be interested in case updates, information and referral services. The client could be one person or all people whom the missing person is related to. In some cases, there may be no family to support however a close network of friends may have taken the form of a family to the missing person. This can lead to some confusion.

As all Missing Persons files will result in a consultation with investigators upon referral to Victim Services, it is important for the support worker to get a list of people who may be interested in services and to clearly understand which people the investigator has been contacting directly. From here, it can be established who the primary contact will be.

It should be noted that during consultation with the lead investigators the support worker should establish if anyone in the person circle of family/friends of the missing person should not be contacted. This can be for a variety of reasons (violent, erratic behavioral issues, may be a suspect). This clarification is a safety precaution and should not be overlooked. Once the primary contact is established and the initial contact made with the family, the support worker can ask questions about family dynamics, issues, concerns and who will be receiving support services.

The primary family contact may change over time. A primary contact is recommended to avoid multiple contacts with various family members which could lead to misunderstandings and miscommunications when they relay information to everyone else. It is a good idea to arrange family meetings at various times to speak to the family as a whole, check in with all family members on other issues they may need referral for, answer questions the family may not have felt comfortable asking the primary contact and to ensure the information you are providing to the family contact is being given to the rest of the family clearly and accurately.

Only those members of the family open to receiving support services will be the client. Anyone who decides to decline services can not be forced or coerced to access services participating family members may be utilizing. However, it is ok to check in with the family to see if anyone requires some support that was not receiving support before. In closing, the client is any and all family and/or friends of the missing person who requires support services and is open to receiving assistance and support from the support worker.

Working with Investigators

The relationship between investigators and support workers is vital in providing services to families. The support worker needs to be able to have an open rapport with the investigators and the investigators need to trust the support worker to share information about the investigation. In order to build this relationship both parties need to recognize the role each will play throughout the investigative process and with the family. This portion of the guide will provide support workers with information on the referral process, providing investigative updates, arranging meetings between family and investigators and working within challenging relationships.

The Referral Process

Officer Referral

Once criteria are met under the referral protocol it is helpful if the support worker and investigators can spend a bit of time discussing the investigation so far. Some important items to review are:

- Status of investigation
- Family/friends to contact
- Have family/friends been cleared as suspects
- History of violence, gang activity, drug use etc.
- Did the missing person have children/spouse/common law

Knowing who you will be meeting; their relationship to the missing person and pressing issues the investigator may have identified will allow you to prepare for the initial meeting with the family. There may be instances where the family is suffering the trauma of a missing loved one on top of additional stressor such as housing, financial or addictions issues. There may also be past interactions with law enforcement that are viewed negatively by the family. While it is important to get information from the investigator it is also critical to refrain from forming preconceived opinions about the clients before meeting them. Going into the initial meeting with an unbiased viewpoint will allow you to be approachable, open and willing to listen to the client when they share their concerns and what their needs are.

Once you have gotten background information from the investigator the initial meeting should be arranged such that the investigator can attend the client home (or other meeting area) with you.

Self Referral

When a family contacts Victim Services directly for support on a missing person file the support worker will need to verify that a missing persons report has been filed with law enforcement. If not, direct the family on where to file a report, what information they will need to provide and offer to assist them when they arrive at the police office to report.

If a report has been filed, the support worker can set up a time to meet with the family in the Victim Services office or police office. Do not arrange the initial meeting at a private dwelling. Upon arranging a meeting time the Support Worker should immediately contact investigators and enquire about safety concerns, progress of investigation, insights into family dynamics and how well the family and investigators have been able to communicate. This information is vital for safety reasons so should be collected before meeting the family for the first time. If there is no available information the Support Worker can reschedule the initial meeting with the family citing a need to get some information on the investigation.

If, upon discussing the case with investigators, it is determined there is a safety risk for the Support Worker, limited services can be provided. Where safety concerns exist, face to face meetings should be kept to a minimum. When possible, offer referral services to the family for counseling and other support services and provide investigation updates only by phone or in the presence of investigators.

If the missing persons investigation is a 'Cold Case' and investigators have no concerns about safety, the Support Worker may offer full support services to the family. In situations like these, the support worker can inform the family of services available and can allow the family to direct how often contact will be made, what supports the family feel they require and referrals based on family request. Investigation updates will be minimal as investigations only continue when new information is provided to law enforcement.

Investigation Updates

Providing investigation updates to the family is an important aspect to providing support services. Investigators are busy individuals with several investigations going at one time. It is important to let the investigator know how often you will be requesting updates.

While the frequency of immediate and long term updates should be accommodated to the request of the family, it may not always be possible. Support workers should discuss with officers the most acceptable and convenient ways for updates to be available in a timely matter. This may take place by phone, email, face to face discussions or by the support worker viewing investigation reports.

Investigators may give the support worker a full update on who has been interviewed, what evidence has been collected and what information still needs to be followed up on. Support workers should always clarify what information can be shared with the families and share only approved information on investigations with the families. Protecting the integrity of the investigation is always the foremost priority.

Anticipate that contact with families will be quite frequent during the initial stages of an investigation (daily, weekly, bi-weekly) and will taper off (monthly, bi-monthly, annually) the longer an investigation continues. Contact will be dictated by family for the most part however, investigators may require more frequent contact in the beginning to clarify information.

It is important to inform the family of the investigative process and how an investigation proceeds. Discuss the differences between a missing child investigation and missing adult investigations. Explain privacy laws and subpoenas and why DNA is collected in the very early stages of an investigation. Giving the family clear information early in the process can help reduce frustrations and fears as time passes. It is also best practice to let a family know when an investigation is considered a Cold Case. Many families fear their loved one will be forgotten so it is also important to explain how cold case investigations are conducted and, should the investigation go 'cold', the support worker should arrange a meeting with family and the cold case investigator as soon as the file/investigation transfer is made.

Arranging Meetings

The family should be contacted within 24 hours of referral for new cases. The initial meeting should follow within 48 hours of referral. Initial meetings should always include the lead investigator, Support worker and primary family contact. Other family members may elect to participate but a primary contact should be established at this initial meeting.

The family will determine how long the initial meeting will be so expect to be with the family anywhere between 1-3 hours. The lead investigator should be available for the entire meeting whenever possible. This allows both the family and the investigator to understand the role the Support Worker will provide during the investigative process.

As an investigation moves forward the family or the investigators may request a meeting with all involved parties periodically. These meetings are positive in that they allow more voices to be heard other than the primary contact, officer and support worker. There are many benefits to having a single primary contact within the family, but sometimes communication can become difficult within the family and information is not always shared openly. Group meetings allow everyone participating to have a voice, share their concerns, fears and ask questions.

Investigators will use these meetings to update the family on the progress of the investigation and to follow up on past information given. There may be a need to clarify details or information that has come to the attention of the investigators. It is important to remember that the investigators priority is to protect the integrity of the investigation so not all information they may have encountered will be shared with the family. It is best practice for the support worker to get an update from the investigator before the meeting so it is known what information will be shared with the family.

Challenging Relationships

Many types of challenges can come about when provide support services to people who are facing a traumatic event. The support worker must be prepared for challenges to arise and also to work quickly to prevent those challenges from becoming a detriment to the working relationship between the family, investigators and the support worker.

While some challenges are discussed in Fig, 5, the support worker must keep in mind that due to the complexity of a missing persons investigation, there may at some point be an expression of animosity from the family towards law enforcement. The family may believe that the law enforcement is not doing enough to bring their loved one home. If this occurs it is critical that the support worker arrange a meeting with investigators so that law enforcement can explain everything they have done to date and what their ideas are for the future to bring a resolution to the investigation. Most often the animosity comes from fear that the loved one has been forgotten. Arranging this meeting quickly can prevent the issue from escalating into a chaotic situation of accusations and breakdown of working relationships.

Engaging Families

Initial Meeting

Upon referral to Victim Services an initial meeting should be arranged between the family, support worker and investigators. This meeting will begin the rapport and trust building process and allows for introductions and clarification of roles (primary contact, support worker and investigators).

It is good practice to select a meeting place the family is comfortable with that is also neutral, neither invading the family's privacy nor at the police office which may be an intimidating environment for family members. Meetings can be held at the family home as long as the family feels comfortable and the environment allows privacy to discuss support and services and conduct a needs assessment. The time of the meeting should not interfere with family responsibilities or appointments. Wherever the meeting is held it must allow privacy so that information shared is protected from outsiders.

Inform the family who will be attending the meeting from the police agency and ask which family members will be present at the meeting. Allow a minimum of 1-3 hours for the first meeting as there will be much to discuss and the family may have many questions. It is always better to plan for more time than what will actually be needed. Inquire if there are any pressing issues outside of the missing family member that the family may need assistance with (shelter, nutrition, transportation).

Following introductions the support worker should clarify what support and services will be provided by the support worker. This information provides a clear understanding for the family as well as investigators. When supporting families of missing persons the support workers role is to provide:

- Support
 - Listening to concerns, fears etc the family may be experiencing
 - Engage in solution focused discussions to address needs/concerns/fears
- Information
 - Investigation updates
 - Family Tool-kit
 - Legal definitions/ procedures (estate, custody, provincial and federal guidelines re: missing persons)
 - Missing persons related materials
- Referral
 - Conduct needs assessment with the family
 - Based on family focused discussion on what pressing needs they are currently facing
 - Define which community agencies can assist, how they are accessed and what, if any, cost will be incurred
 - Referrals made only with family permission
- Advocacy
 - If services are denied the support worker will discuss need for services with agency on the family's behalf

The initial meeting can go for several hours. Take breaks periodically to avoid overwhelming the family. The following should be addressed at the initial meeting:

- Lead investigators assigned along with contact information
- Who the family will have as a primary contact
 - Explain why a primary contact is necessary
 - Needs Assessment to determine immediate needs
 - Introduce family tool kit and review it with the family

If the family becomes overwhelmed or the meeting goes too long arrange another time to meet with the family. Let them know what is left to discuss and leave them with the family tool-kit, additional information on community agencies (if any were brought) and business/contact cards. Establish a date for the next meeting (within 7 days of initial meeting) and invite the family to contact the number on the business cards if they have questions before the next meeting.

As every family is different it may take several meetings to get through the tool kit and establish all the immediate needs the family is facing. The support worker must remember to allow the family to set the pace of contact, especially meetings as they take away precious time from the family.

Above all, the support worker must respect the family's decisions regarding when, where and how long contact will occur between the family and law enforcement. Deferring to their needs whenever possible will build trust which in turn will strengthen the working relationship between the family and support worker.

Follow Up

Establishing when follow up contact will occur is important. As already mentioned, contact should be guided by the family. Contact will continue until the loved one is located or the family requests contact to cease.

Follow up contact is used to establish how the family is maintaining itself since the support worker last had contact. Follow up meetings and appointments can occur for the following reasons:

- Investigation update
- Referrals to community agencies
- Provide information requested by the family
- Check in to see how the family is maintaining itself and see if any needs have arisen

Support workers will at times have to make contact with the family that is not previously established. This can occur if investigators have asked for information to be obtained from or given to the family, requested a meeting, new support/ information services related to the family is available. Unplanned contact can also occur if the family and support worker have not had contact for a significant amount of time. Birthdays and anniversaries are other reasons unplanned contact may occur.

Historical Missing Persons

Historical missing persons require a gentle approach. Families have been left for years, and in some cases decades, to deal with the trauma on their own. Some of these families may have moved forward with their lives while others may still be reliving the trauma on a daily basis. It is important to discuss historical missing cases with Cold Case investigators to see if contact has been maintained with the family.

Identifying historical cases

The support worker will meet with the investigator assigned to the historical file. Discussion should focus on background information of the investigation and the family. The support worker can ask questions on any outstanding tasks for the investigation and if information is still surfacing about the missing person. Questions focusing on the family will provide information on who has been the primary contact, how frequently contact is made, who initiates contact and if any indicators are present of pressing needs the family may require assistance with.

In some cases the investigator and family may have established a routine of contact (once a year, on anniversary of initial report, missing persons birthday etc) or contact may have ceased altogether. In discussions with investigators it will be important to review the following:

- How often file has changed investigators since going cold
- How often each investigator contacted the family
- The nature of the contact with family
 - To provide investigation updates
 - To inform of a change in investigator
 - To check in on family well being
- Family's reception to contact from investigators
 - Was the family receptive to the contact
 - Was the family hostile to the investigator
 - Was there an indication of disinterest
 - Was there an indication of emotional/mental state
- How often does the investigator contact the family
- How is the family contacted
 - Phone call
 - Letter
 - Email
- Upon concluding contact does the investigator establish when next contact will occur
- Has the family indicated they would like assistance through victim services
 - Is the family aware that assistance can be offered through VS
 - Has the family had previous contact with VS
 - If so, what was the nature of the contact

Only after reviewing the case file and discussing past interactions and communications can the support worker and investigator assess if contact should be made with the family.

Assessing need for contact

Although all families of missing persons need support from a positive support network, not all families will need support from a professional or community agency. The need for contact on historical long-term missing persons can only be determined after considering the following factors:

- How long has the person been missing
- Existing family members who may benefit from support
- Interactions to date with investigating officers
- Needs of the family the investigator may be aware of
- Cooperation of family with the investigation
- Issues arising regarding family members who were children at time of initial report (siblings, biological children to the missing person)

Once all of the above questions have been answered, the support worker and investigator can make the decision for contact to be made with the family or to reserve decision to a later date.

For those long-term missing cases that it is determined contact would not proceed, the support worker and investigator must conduct another review of the file at a later date. This date can be determined by the support worker and investigator (i.e.: review in one year).

Where it is determined that contact will be a benefit, the support worker and investigator will determine the best way to introduce the support worker to the family that will not force the family to relive the trauma or feel obligated to accept services. In all cases, the investigator should introduce the support worker to the family either through discussion over the phone, email or face-to-face contact.

Support workers should never cold call families of historical missing persons cases.

Initiating contact

There are several options the support worker and investigator can explore when attempting to establish contact with the family of a long-term missing person. The main concern in establishing an opportunity for introduction of service is to minimize the trauma to the family. Some options for initiating contact are outlined below.

Investigator introduction

If the investigator has already established a regular contact schedule with the family then during the next scheduled contact the investigator can offer services to the family. The offer of services should be kept brief and concise. The family may need reassurance that declining services will not impact the investigation negatively. If service is declined investigator may offer to mail information on support services and suggest to the family that services will be mentioned again upon next scheduled contact.

Unrelated investigation

An opportunity for contact with a family of long-term missing persons may arise through the regular support worker capacity. If Victim Services is already offering support services and the family identifies a need for support due to the trauma of a missing person, the support worker can discuss services with the family to determine if they feel they will benefit from the additional services. The support worker will notify the investigator that contact has been established and inform if services have been accepted or declined. If services have been declined the support worker will continue support services for the incident in which contact was first established (i.e.: assault, death, robbery).

Family initiated contact

Sometimes families of missing persons will make unscheduled contact with the investigator. At this time, the investigator can offer support services. Unscheduled contact may also occur as public awareness grows on supports available for families of missing persons. Families may attempt to contact their local Victim Services Unit directly. When a family takes this form of direct initiative the support worker will take the time to explain services, offer the family toolkit and conduct an immediate needs assessment.

Referral from another agency

Agencies from the community may, on occasion, refer family members of long-term missing persons to local Victim Services Units. The support worker can speak to the family directly to conduct a needs assessment and get background information on the family support system. The family toolkit can be offered and services explained.

While it is important to review long-term missing persons cases and determine which families may require services, support workers need to be flexible and able to adapt quickly. Families of missing persons may be from other areas of the country or the missing person may have disappeared from another area of the country. These are unique cases in which the support worker will have to tailor services to the situation.

If the family is in another geographic location, the support worker will offer investigation updates but will also need to inquire what agencies are available in the family community for referral purposes. If the missing person disappeared in another geographic location, the support worker will provide full support services to the family while establishing contact with the investigators in the appropriate community to arrange for case updates.

Family Toolkit

During the initial visit with the family the support worker will present the Family Tool Kit to the primary contact. The support worker will go through the tool kit, explaining the information within and how the family can use it.

When the family utilizes the tool kit, any information that is to be passed along to investigators should be photocopied, original to investigators and copy to the family. If the family requests, the support worker can keep an additional copy in the Victim Services file.

Identifying Needs

Families of missing persons, while experiencing the trauma of a missing loved one, may also experience various needs. These needs may have existed prior to the person going missing, may be directly caused by the current incident or may occur during the missing persons process.

As the support worker it is important to periodically conduct a needs assessment with the family to see if all the supports they require are in place. Support workers must be mindful that what the family thinks they need and what the support worker thinks they need may not always be the same. While observations of the support worker should be shared with the family, ultimately the family will determine what their needs are. The support worker must accept this even if there is a pressing need the family is not facing. The only time the support worker should disregard the family is if a child is in need of assistance due to abuse or neglect.

Immediate Needs

Immediate needs will be identified during the initial meeting, through discussion with family members. Immediate needs may arise within the first 30 days of initial report.

Short Term Needs

Short term needs are identified during the first 6 months of initial report. Identifying the short term needs will occur through consistent follow up contact with the family.

Long Term Needs

Long term needs will be identified throughout the investigation and determined by the family and addressed at the family's discretion. Most long term needs will have a direct link to the missing persons process however some may have pre-existed.

Assessing Supports

Personal and Professional supports are vital to assisting the family through the missing persons process. Without supports, families can quickly become overwhelmed resulting in a withdrawal from investigators and from addressing the trauma the family is experiencing. This withdrawal can also be detrimental to the family resulting in addiction issues as the family finds a means to cope internally with the trauma.

Personal

Personal supports come from friends, co-workers and the family itself. Everyone turns to the comfort of friends and family in times of need, if they are fortunate to have them. As the support worker it is important to find out who the family's personal supports are and how effective this personal support system is.

Friends and family can be a great resource however, caution must be taken as friends and family can also influence views the family may have of the investigation process. It is best to encourage the family to surround themselves with positive, healthy people at this time. The support worker should be prepared to encourage healthy friendships as some families may only have connections that are unhealthy.

In cases where the family is lacking personal supports or has only unhealthy supports, the support worker may have to increase follow up to provide healthy support until professional supports are established. Increasing follow ups temporarily will give the support worker time to assist the family in recognizing if the personal supports they have are negatively impacting the family.

Professional

All families will have at least one professional support service during the missing persons process, that of the support worker. It is important that after identifying the needs of the family, the support worker offers to locate and refer the family to appropriate agencies for specific support services. Examples of professional supports could be counseling agencies, education facilities, legal agencies and child care providers.

All agencies that families are referred to should be:

- Accessible (easy to locate)
- Accommodating (open to working within the preference of the family; offer home visits)
- Flexible (hours of service both daytime and evening)
- Timely (have a short or non-existent wait list)
- Culturally sensitive to the families needs (awareness of traditional First Nation/Aboriginal culture and other Immigrant populations)

Culturally Specific

An increased interest in First Nation peoples connecting with their traditional culture as well as an increase of new immigrants settling in Saskatchewan has resulted in a need for more culturally specific services and programs. Along with identifying that a family may be from a specific culture the support worker must also verify that the family is interested in services specific to that same culture.

Aboriginal Population

There are many different cultures within the Aboriginal community. Languages, traditions, teachings and spirituality are very diverse throughout the Aboriginal population. It is important for the support worker to connect with Aboriginal agencies within the community to identify what resources are available for families of missing Aboriginal women and men. Some of the traditional practices of Aboriginal people are:

- Sweats
- Smudging
- Ceremonies
- Elder counseling

The most effective way to find out what is available in the community is to make contact with and build a respectful working relationship with community Elders. When locating Elders some important questions to ask are:

- Who is available within the community
- When are Elders accessible for guidance
- What type of guidance they offer (counseling, spiritual, education)
- What community are they from (Cree, Ojibwa, Dene, Métis)
- Do they require anything specific to perform a service (Tobacco, Sweet grass)
- Who is to provide the supplies for them
- Where can they be accessed in the community
- Will gifts, honorariums or fuel costs need to be supplied

Ask the Elders in your community how to properly address them, request services and give thanks. Elders are here to provide knowledge and promote understanding. They will be happy to share some of their cultural practices with you.

Appendix 'B' provides a list of questions the support worker can refer to when attempting to locate elder services.

Immigrant Population

Diversity of Saskatchewan culture is increasing and with it the immigrant population is steadily climbing. It is highly recommended that support workers access the internet and local cultural agencies (i.e.: Open Door Society, Mosques) to gain a general understanding of the cultural traditions and practices of any immigrant family to whom services are provided. Understanding how to respectfully address the family can be vital to providing future services to families.

Locating Support Services

Support workers will benefit from identifying community agencies and arranging meetings to discuss what families of missing persons require for support services. Many agencies are unaware what the unique needs of the families of missing persons are, therefore, are also unaware that services they may already provide may fit into assisting families of missing persons.

Compiling a list of agencies that have indicated a willingness to offer support services with immediate, short and long-term needs will assist the support worker in choosing appropriate agencies to refer the family to. This will also provide the support worker with knowledge about the agency itself which can be explained to the family when offering the referral.

Appendix 'C' includes a copy of the Saskatchewan Resource Guide for reference. This guide is not inclusive of all support agencies.

Referrals

The support worker will not always have to provide referrals to families of missing persons. Some families will already have both personal and professional supports in place. Other families will have a strong personal support system and if professional supports are required, that family will seek out and make contact with the agency on their own. Sometimes, families may require several referrals to professional agencies as their personal support system may not be very extensive.

The support worker, upon conducting a needs assessment, will discuss with the family, options to help address the needs the family has identified as immediate or short term. Any issues not identified as a priority by the family can be monitored during follow-up contact. The support worker can explain which community agencies are available to assist and how the referral process works for each.

Referrals to community agencies must be by direct request of the adult family member in need or by the guardian of minor children. Adults can not request referrals for other adults without their consent. If this occurs, the support worker must verify the adult being referred has given consent by briefly speaking directly to him/her.

If there are needs the support worker has identified that the family does not see as a need, the support worker can offer to leave information related to obtaining support services for that issue however can not refer the family to the agency offering support in that area. The support worker can monitor the issue and readdress when opportunities arise.

Advocacy

There may be occasions when a referral is made to a support agency and the agency declines services. If this occurs the support worker may have to advocate for the family. It is important that referrals be appropriate to the family's needs. If a referral is appropriate and services are still declined, the support worker can, with the family's permission, request a review or meeting with the agency supervisor/director.

Not all communities have the same resources so there may be times when referral options are very limited. In these cases the support worker may want to arrange a meeting to sit down with agency representatives to discuss what the family needs and see if the agency can find a way to address the issue. If the agency is unable to meet the needs of the family the support worker will have to look at other alternatives to getting these needs addressed which may include referral to another community or urban centre and online resources.

Community Resources

Community resources are vital to meeting the unique and diverse needs of families of missing persons. When locating resources within the community the support worker will need to review the agency's mandate and referral process. It is recommended that the support worker speak with a community agency representative prior to referring the family for services. These discussions can assist the agency in discovering how they can assist families of missing persons.

Following up with community agencies (either after referral or after an information sharing meeting) can establish a rapport with the agency and result in a connection that can become a benefit over time. Agencies share information and by connecting with agencies in the community the support worker can encourage discussions around the subject of missing persons.

Online Resources

There are many online resources that cover the subject of missing persons. It is the support workers responsibility to ensure that only verified positive websites are suggested to the family. The support worker can research the various websites on the internet and determine which offer support and which offer only information.

Appendix 'C-1' is a compiled list of verified websites. The support worker may use this list as a starting point in online resources. If the family is accessing online resources it is important for the support worker to follow up on how beneficial the website is to the family. If it is having a negative impact the support worker may want to offer an alternative online resource.

Supporting Hope

Supporting hope is one of the most challenging tasks the support worker will undertake when working with families of missing persons. Families will go through many different phases of hope and it is unlikely that they will experience the same phases at the same time. For this reason, the support worker needs to check in on the family's 'Hope Cycle'.

The Hope Cycle

The Hope Cycle is never ending. Families can have as differing hopes as they do personalities. Each individual family member will experience different stages of hope at differing times. This can create an increase in stress levels as disagreements and hurt feelings arise from conversations revealing what each family member is currently feeling.

In the example of the hope cycle provided, we see that most of the hope involves discovering where the missing person is. At the beginning of the cycle, there is a clear time line: first the hope is that the missing person is simply lost or hurt and unable to call for help. This then changes to the hope that the missing person will be safely returned home. As time progresses the hope shifts to just wanting the missing person to be located safely. The more time that passes, hope changes to that of locating remains so the family can lay their loved one to rest. From here the hope is that, with so much time passing and no word on the whereabouts of the missing person, the family can continue moving forward through life (celebrations, find happiness again). The catch in a hope cycle is that hope never moves in such clear timelines. The family will bounce from one to the next in no particular order. The only commonality is that every family member experiencing feelings of the loss of the missing person will experience this hope cycle.

Celebrating Missing Persons

Hope can be expressed in many different ways. There are ways of honoring the missing person, raising awareness of the missing person and moving forward. The support worker will need to be able to encourage and share ideas for expressing hope that is respectful to all family members no matter where they are in their hope cycle. The following chart provides examples support workers can suggest to families as a means of supporting the family's expression of hope. This chart is not inclusive and support workers are encouraged to explore ideas with the family on how they may express hope in ways that are tailored to their need.

Ambiguous Loss

What is Ambiguous Loss

Ambiguous loss occurs when there is physical absence and psychological presence of a loved one. It is the area of the unknown. There is no way to determine if the missing loved one will ever return or why they have gone missing in the first place. This ambiguity leaves a family with a sense of a never ending future of questions without answers.

Signs of Ambiguous Loss

Signs and symptoms of Ambiguous Loss often resemble PTSD (post-traumatic stress disorder). There are three main categories: Reliving, avoidance and arousal. The following chart provides some examples of each category.

Reliving	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Flashback episodes, where the event seems to be happening again and again• Repeated upsetting memories• Repeated nightmares• Strong, uncomfortable reactions to situations that remind of the event
Avoidance	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Emotional 'numbing'• Feeling detached from reality• Unable to remember important aspects of the trauma• Lack of interest in normal activities• Expressing less emotion• Avoiding places, people or things that are a reminder of the event• Feeling as if there is no future
Arousal	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Difficulty concentrating• Being easily startled• Exaggerated responses• Hyper-vigilance (more aware of surroundings)• Irritability or outbursts of anger• Difficulty sleeping or staying asleep

Differences between Ambiguous Loss and Grief

Ambiguous loss differs from ordinary loss in that there is no verification of death, no certainty that the person will come back and no guarantee that the family can return to the way they used to be. There is no closure. There is only the unknown.

Grief occurs when a loved one is confirmed deceased and the family has some semblance of closure by means of ceremonies honoring lives and symbolizing death, most with the benefit of the decedent's remains for interment.

Discussing Ambiguous Loss with family

The support worker should review the definition and signs/symptoms of Ambiguous loss with the family only when signs and symptoms become noticeable. It is not recommended that the support worker bring up the subject of loss and grief until the family opens the subject for discussion. Prematurely introducing the subject before the family is ready to address it could be detrimental to the expressions of hope the family has engaged in from time of initial reporting.

The support worker must remember that the family has very little control during the missing persons investigation. The family must be allowed to control the pace when it comes to their mental/emotional well being (as long as they are not at risk of self harm or harming others).

Evaluating the Support Process

There are no timelines on how long a missing persons investigation will continue. Some families may not require support for the entire duration of the investigation while others may only require support at the beginning and conclusion. The support worker, while providing follow-up care, investigation updates and needs assessments, must also monitor the support process.

Some families may only require guidance on steps they can take to assist with the investigation and to search for their loved one without interfering with law enforcement efforts. In these instances follow-up will be quite infrequent. A file will be kept open until the family requests it be closed. Some instances where families may require limited assistance are in the areas of Search & Rescue and Legislation Grants and Acts.

Search and Rescue

Many families will at some point, conduct their own organized search for the missing person. This can be a very chaotic and stressful time for family members if they are unaware of the proper search techniques and best ways to preserve evidence. The support worker can provide the family, upon request, a copy of the Search & Rescue tips. This sheet provides information on preparing search grids, proper search formation, tagging possible areas of interest and maintaining the evidentiary integrity of items of interest.

Refer to Appendix D: Search and Rescue Guidelines

Government Legislation

There are two recent items of legislation that relate to families of missing persons. These items include the Parents of Missing or Murdered Children Grant (PMMC) and the Missing Persons Presumption of Death Act.

Parents of Murdered or Missing Children Grant (PMMC)

This grant will provide a financial supplement to families who have taken a leave from employment due to the murder of their child or if their child has gone missing. The application is very in-depth and does have time restrictions for eligibility and duration of time the supplement can be paid out.

Refer to Appendix E: Application Guide and Form for PMMC

Missing Persons and Presumption of Death Act

This act provides families of missing persons an option when dealing with estate/property/child issues of the missing person. Prior to this Act a person had to be missing for a minimum of seven years before they could be declared legally dead. This Act permits families of missing persons to appeal the courts to have a missing person declared dead without waiting seven years. There are criteria that the family must meet when submitting the application to the court.

Refer to Appendix F: Missing Persons and Presumption of Death Act

Support Worker Self Care

Maintaining Boundaries

It is very important to maintain boundaries when working with families of missing persons, similarly to working with victims of crime. The support worker must clearly establish limits that allow for safe connections between the professional and the family. Being friendly to the family is expected, but it is not beneficial to build a friendship as it then makes boundaries more difficult to define. There must be a clear understanding of the limits and responsibilities of the role everyone has during the missing persons investigation.

Boundaries are set for the support worker's own mental and physical health in order to avoid the "rescuer" role and avoid compassion fatigue. It also assists the support worker to remain focused on support worker responsibility to the family and the provision of helpful and appropriate services to the family.

During the initial meeting establish clear agreements with the family regarding support worker role as a service provider, availability, best options for communication, and what to expect if paths cross in a social setting. When boundary issues or warning signs appear, address these issues with the family quickly. Be sensitive to feelings and emphasize the importance of maintaining healthy boundaries.

Self-disclosure can be a very useful tool when engaging families and building rapport. When sharing personal information ensure that the information is relevant to the family. Too much self-disclosure shifts the focus from the family to the service provider and can create confusion in terms of roles and expectations of the relationship. Realize that how a family interprets words and actions may not match what was being communicated. With these sensitive relationships, the support worker will need to frequently clarify communication, roles and boundaries. This will also give the client an opportunity to ask clarifying questions.

Dual relationships in smaller communities are unavoidable. If a support worker has had a personal relationship with a family before becoming the family support worker, professional judgment must be used when interacting with the family in social settings. Pay particular attention to family confidentiality as well as family physical and emotional security.

Managing Stress

Take care of yourself! Working with families of missing persons can be very emotional and stressful. There is no limit to how long the support worker may be providing services so while establishing roles and boundaries the support worker also needs to make sure to get enough of the following:

- sleep
- nutrition

- socialization outside of work
- exercise
- consultation/supervision as needed
- leaving work at work

Self Inventory

Whenever offering support to a family, the support worker should conduct a self inventory to ensure that the family is being treated in a caring and respectful manner. Some suggested actions and attitudes to take note of during self inventory are:

Resiliency

Do not judge how the family should react

- Everyone responds to trauma based on their life experience, personality and resilience
- Do not re-traumatize the family

Small Talk

Do not ask unnecessary questions/make unnecessary comments

- Small talk can be acceptable if the family is receptive to it however do not monopolize the entire conversation with it

Nurture

Be gentle when asking necessary but invasive questions

- Explain why you need to know (lifestyle, addictions)
- Do not judge the answers or question the family's honesty in answering them

Biases

Leave your biases and preconceived notions at home

- Having an open mind allows rapport and trust to be established

Authenticity

Be real

- A genuine caring attitude will put both yourself and the family at ease

Vocabulary

Use plain language

- Use simple, easy to understand vocabulary
- Avoid legal jargon whenever possible

Missing Persons – Police Referrals to Victim Services in Saskatchewan

April 2010

In cases involving missing persons that:

- Are suspicious or unusual in nature;
- Involves Major Crime Unit investigation;
- Requires search and rescue;
- Have distraught family/involved person that need support: or
- Have a family/involved person who requests help from Victim Services

The investigator should involve Victim Services as soon as the investigation allows, to minimize the impact of trauma to the family.

In response, Victim Services will provide information, support and referrals as required.

This protocol was developed in response to recommendation 13 from the Final Report of the Provincial Partnership Committee on Missing Persons, by a working committee comprised of police, Victim Services coordinators, and Victims Services Branch (Saskatchewan Ministry of Justice and Attorney General).

Approved by the Saskatchewan Association of Chiefs of Police and the Saskatchewan Association of Police Affiliated Victim Services Inc., in April 2010.

Elders Protocol Q&A

What is the role of an Elder?

Elders have specific roles they play in the community. Some Elders focus is on education while others are on traditional medicines, ceremonies, community etc.

Elders are not interchangeable. It is important to clarify what role you want the Elder to fulfill when seeking services.

Is there a difference between Male and Female Elders?

Roles and gender depend on what the teaching is focused on. Different First Nations communities have varying roles for their Elders so it is not possible to explain each role and why a specific gender fits that role better than the other.

What is the role of an Elder's Helper?

Elder's Helpers assist with preparing for ceremonies, gathering supplies and information. The role of the Elder's Helper is also gender based and is dependant on what type of Elder is requested and what type of service has been requested.

How is an Elder approached?

When contacting an Elder to request services always bring tobacco.

Do Elders receive honorariums?

Traditional Elders never ask for monetary payment but tobacco is a necessity for any service they provide. Elders are highly respected people within their community. In the past they were paid with gifts for their services (blankets, horses, guns, and clothing). Offering an honorarium as thanks for their services is appropriate.

Why is tobacco given to Elders?

Tobacco is considered one of the most sacred medicines. It is used in prayer. The smoke from the tobacco brings the prayers to the Creator.

What is the use of the flag/cloth?

Flags/Prayer cloths are used during prayer to ask the spirits in the spirit world to intercede with the Creator for the prayers that are being asked.

Who can participate in traditional ceremonies?

Anyone can participate in traditional ceremonies. There is etiquette to follow so always ask what appropriate behaviours are expected and dress for the specific ceremony you will be attending.

When should Elder services be considered?

Elder services should be considered when direction and guidance is needed. Elders also enjoy visiting so requesting a visit without need of guidance or services is always welcome.

Why are Elders important to the First Nations Community?

Elders have knowledge, wisdom and traditional teachings that have been passed down to them from generation to generation. They are the foundation of their community. Elders keep traditions, ceremonies and oral histories from being lost. Elders are a link to the past and the key to future generations learning traditional practices.

What is the difference between a ceremony, feast and sweat?

All gatherings are considered ceremonies. Most ceremonies include a feast. Sweats are purifying and knowledge seeking ceremonies and are traditionally held at certain times of the year for specific reasons.

Why do First Nations People smudge/pray over themselves?

Smudging is a way of purifying oneself before a ceremony. It clears the mind of negative thoughts and the body of negative energy.

Why is food placed in the forest at some ceremonies?

The food from the feast has been prayed over by the Elder's with a sacred pipe. Some of this food has to be offered to the spirits. It is a practice of respect for the spirit world and the Creator.

Why are skirts significant to women during ceremonies? Should one be worn when seeking an Elder?

Skirts represent womanhood and the circle of life. Women traditionally held sacred roles in the community and were the foundation of the people. The skirt, with its roundness, is symbolic of this. The skirt honors and respects women.

What is the significance of long hair to First Nations Peoples?

The braid represents sweet grass which balances the mind, body and spirit. When hair is braided, prayer should be given to request this balance and to give thanks. Long hair represents spiritual strength so when it is cut short, negative emotions can take over the mind and spirit. Hair traditionally is only cut during certain times of the month and coincides with the moon.

What is the appropriate way to request a blessing from an Elder?

Make the request while offering tobacco. Blessings are given at every season change for the home. Blessing can also be offered during times of crisis or death. Smudging must be done prior to blessing.

What is the appropriate way to request sweet grass, sage and other medicines from an Elder?

There are two ways to request medicines: trade or offer a gift and tobacco.

If the Elder only speaks his/her traditional language, is it appropriate to request a translator?

Most Elders speak a second language (English) so just ask if an interpreter is needed.

SEARCH TIPS

- Print out a picture or map of the area, make a grid and search small areas marked on the grid, in order. Starting point should make sense.
- Consider the terrain you will be searching (heavily treed? Rocky? Water?)
- Mark obstacles that may require a work around (for example, flat land with a large slough in the middle; how will your search progress once you have reached the slough)
- Keep no more than 5 feet between searchers
- Keep all searchers in a straight line
- Move slow and methodical; do not rush
- Keep eyes out for changes in vegetation (grass or weeds that don't look like they belong there, depressions or mounds that seem out of place)
- Designate one person to walk behind the line with flags
- If something of interest is located:
 - the searcher should raise his/her hand
 - the entire search line should stop
 - the designate marker should be the one to take a picture and place a marker flag
 - write the time and date of discovery on the flag
- Mark on your grid, which areas the search has completed Mark your starting and stopping points
- Measure the distance covered and mark it
- Bring appropriate clothing
 - Layer clothing
 - Hip waders/rubber boots
 - Change of clothes for after the search is complete
 - Jackets
 - Gloves
 - Hats
- Bring appropriate supplies
 - Flashlights
 - Flags for marking areas of interest and start/stop points
 - Felt Marker for writing on the marker flags

- Cameras
 - Batteries
 - Water
 - First Aid Kit
 - Bug Repellant
 - Food
 - Backpacks to carry supplies
- Legal Authority: You must have permission to search privately owned land
 - Having a working relationship with law enforcement is necessary as investigators will be able to preserve that chain of evidence and send any pictures or physical evidence to proper facilities for testing and confirmation of identification. You may want to elect one person from your group to act as the contact person between the family and law enforcement.
 - Mark and take a picture of anything you find of interest. DO NOT REMOVE it. Removing evidence can result in no prosecution if there is a suspicion of foul play.

APPLICATION GUIDE FOR FEDERAL INCOME SUPPORT FOR PARENTS OF MURDERED OR MISSING CHILDREN GRANT

PLEASE ENSURE TO READ THE FOLLOWING INSTRUCTIONS AS THEY PROVIDE INFORMATION REQUIRED TO APPLY FOR THIS GRANT.

The Federal Income Support for Parents of Murdered or Missing Children (PMMC) is an income support grant available to eligible applicants who have suffered a loss of income as a result of taking time away from work to cope with the death or disappearance of their child (or children) under the age of 18. The child (or children) must have been the victim(s) of a probable Criminal Code offence that led to their death or disappearance and the incident must have occurred in Canada on or after January 1, 2013. To apply for PMMC income support, a completed PMMC Application Form, Incident Report Form, Employment Form(s), and any additional required documentation must be submitted to the PMMC Processing Centre.

IF YOU HAVE RECENTLY COLLECTED EMPLOYMENT INSURANCE (EI) OR QUÉBEC PARENTAL INSURANCE PLAN (QPIP) BENEFITS:

You are not permitted to receive PMMC payments and EI or QPIP benefits for the same weeks. If you are currently receiving any type of EI or QPIP benefits, or if you have received these benefits since the incident occurred, please ensure you indicate it on your application. If you start receiving any type of EI or QPIP benefits after you send your application for the PMMC grant, you must notify Service Canada at 1 800 O-CANADA (1-800-622-6232) (TTY: 1-800-926-9105). While PMMC payments may not be made for the same weeks as EI or QPIP benefits are paid, you may be entitled to receive the PMMC grant once your EI or QPIP benefits end. Please visit the following website for more information: www.servicecanada.gc.ca

HOW DO I APPLY?

To apply online, or to mail a printed application, please visit the Service Canada website at www.servicecanada.gc.ca. The original signed PMMC Employment Form(s) and Incident Report Form must be sent to the PMMC Processing Centre at PO 8232, Station T, Ottawa, Ontario, K1G 3H7.

Apply for the PMMC grant you must:

- Submit a completed and signed PMMC Application Form within the 52 weeks following the death or disappearance of your child as a result of a probable Criminal Code offence (the incident). If you include your banking information, you will receive payments faster through Direct Deposit at your bank.
- Submit a PMMC Employment Form(s), completed and signed by each of your recent employers to demonstrate that you have earned a minimum of $6500 in the previous calendar year or the 52 weeks immediately prior to the incident and that you are on leave from all current employment. If you are self-employed, you must complete and sign a PMMC Employment Form on your own behalf and submit a Canada Revenue Agency Notice of Assessment from the previous income taxation year.
- Submit a PMMC Incident Report Form completed and stamped by the law enforcement agency where the incident was reported.

NOTE: The PMMC Employment Form(s) and Incident Report Form that you submit must be the original completed and signed or stamped forms and not copies or prints of electronic copies.

WHAT IS MY ENTITLEMENT?

- If you are eligible, you may receive up to 35 weeks of income support during the 52 week period immediately following the incident. This 52 week period is referred to as the Income Support Period and payments will not be made beyond this period. The payments for eligible weeks may be taken in consecutive weeks or divided into periods within the Income Support Period.
- The maximum 35 weeks available may be shared by more than one eligible applicant in respect of the same incident.
- Income support is $350 a week paid bi-weekly.
- PMMC payments are considered taxable income, therefore income tax will be deducted from the PMMC payments prior to issuing, and T4A slips will be issued at the end of the year. For Québec residents, RL-1 slips will also be issued.
- You may apply for PMMC payments only once within the Income Support Period.
- The number of weeks you are eligible to receive may change to accommodate the sharing of income support with another eligible recipient in respect of the same incident. You will be advised in writing if your payment is being amended.

WHAT IF ANOTHER PERSON APPLIES?

- The PMMC grant provides up to 35 weeks of income support, which may be shared by eligible applicants in respect of the same incident. This means that if more than one person is eligible for the grant for the same incident, the 35 weeks will be divided amongst the applicants.
- Each applicant must complete a separate PMMC Application Form and submit his or her own PMMC Employment Form(s) and PMMC Incident Report Form.
- Applicants should indicate on their PMMC application form how many weeks they wish to receive. However, if applicants do not indicate to Service Canada how many weeks they wish to receive or if they do not agree on how to divide the eligible weeks, Service Canada will determine the division using a sharing mechanism.

- be legally responsible for the child or the children involved in the incident;
- have recent labour force attachment having earned at least $6,500 in the previous calendar year or in the 52 weeks immediately prior to the incident;
- be on leave from all employment as a result of the incident, or if already on leave from employment at the time of the incident, be unable to return to work;
- have a valid Social Insurance Number (SIN);
- have not been charged with committing a probable Criminal Code offence that led to the death or disappearance of the child; and
- not currently be receiving any type of Employment Insurance (EI) benefits or Québec Parental Insurance Plan (QPIP) benefits.

INCIDENT ELIGIBILITY: The PMMC grant is payable if the incident meets the following criteria:

- the child must be deceased or missing as a result of a probable Criminal Code offence;
- the child must be under 18 at the time of the incident;
- the incident must have occurred in Canada on or after January 1, 2013;
- in the case of a missing child, the child must have been missing for over one week; and
- in the case of a deceased child, it is not probable that the child was a willing party to the crime that led to his or her death.

In addition to the foregoing, you must attest that:

- to the best of your knowledge, your child is missing or deceased as a result of a probable Criminal Code offence and you were not a willing party to the Criminal Code offence that led to the child's death or disappearance;
- to the best of your knowledge, your child was not a willing party to the Criminal Code offence that led to his or her death (where the child is deceased);
- you have completely stopped working from all employment; and
- you have declared any Employment Insurance (EI) or Québec Parental Insurance Plan (QPIP) benefits that you have received since the incident.

BASIS AND TIMING OF PAYMENT

Payments will be made on a bi-weekly basis for eligible weeks during which the recipient is away from work. Complete applications for the grant received within one year of the incident will be assessed to the week of the incident. Applications received more than 52 weeks following the incident will not be considered. Any amounts that are due for eligible weeks prior to the application being processed and approved will be paid in a lump sum when payments begin. Payments will not be backdated beyond January 1, 2013 and the incident must not have occurred prior to January 1, 2013.

MAXIMUM AMOUNT PAYABLE

For the purposes of administering the grant and the maximum amount payable, PMMC Income Support Periods are assigned to eligible recipients of the PMMC grant.

The maximum amount payable is a fixed amount of $350 per week, minus taxes, paid every two weeks for a maximum of 35 weeks during the Income Support Period. After the Income Support Period has ended, payments will no longer be made, even if the maximum of 35 weeks has not been paid. The amount may be paid to one eligible recipient alone or may be shared by eligible recipients. Where eligible recipients share the amount, payment may be taken concurrently or separately to a maximum combined total of 35 weeks during the Income Support Period.

Applicants may apply for the PMMC grant only once within an Income Support Period. Where a recipient is receiving or has received PMMC payments (either alone or sharing with another recipient), and an Income Support Period established for that recipient has not ended, he or she may not re-apply for the grant until the Income Support Period has ended. This rule applies even if there is a new incident with a different child.

DIVISION OF WEEKS

Where there is more than one eligible recipient and they do not come to an agreement regarding the division of weeks of payment, the weeks will be divided as follows:

- If more than 18 weeks have been paid to the first recipient, the remaining weeks will be paid to the second recipient, or divided amongst later recipients. The first recipient will cease to receive grant payments.
- If less than 18 weeks have been paid to the first recipient, the first recipient will continue to receive grant payments to week 18 at which time their grant payments will cease. The remaining 17 weeks will be paid to the second recipient, or be divided amongst later recipients.

TERMINATION OF FUNDING

Canada may terminate funding when the first of any of the following occur;

- the recipient returns to work;
- the maximum number of weeks under the PMMC grant have been paid;
- 2 weeks following the week a missing child is found alive;
- the 52 week Income Support Period has ended;
- the recipient requests that their grant payments stop;
- the recipient is charged with a Criminal Code offence that lead to the death or disappearance of the child. (If the recipient is not found guilty of the offence or any related offence, payments may resume if the Income Support Period has not expired and provided the eligibility criteria are met);
- any type of EI or QPIP benefits become payable.

ONGOING ELIGIBILITY

Recipients must, during the Income Support Period, continue to meet the eligibility requirements of the PMMC grant. As such, the recipient agrees to promptly notify Employment and Social Development Canada (ESDC)/Service Canada when any of the following occurs:

- the recipient returns to work;
- the missing child is found;
- the recipient is charged with an offence that led to the death or disappearance of his/her child; or
- the recipient starts receiving any type of EI or QPIP benefits for the same weeks he/she is receiving PMMC payments. (In that case the recipient will not be paid PMMC grant payments during those weeks).

REPAYMENT REQUIREMENTS

Failure to notify ESDC/Service Canada of a change to your eligibility or failure to meet the eligibility or ongoing eligibility criteria for funding under the PMMC grant may result in an overpayment. An overpayment shall be deemed to be a debt due and owing to Canada and the recipient shall pay the amount to Canada immediately unless Canada directs otherwise.

Interest shall be charged on overdue repayments owing under this Agreement in accordance with the Interest and Administrative Charges Regulations (SOR/96-188) made pursuant to the Financial Administration Act (R.S.C. 1985, c. F-11).

REPAYMENT CONDITIONS

In cases where a recipient is found guilty of a Criminal Code offence that led to the death or disappearance of the child, the recipient will be deemed ineligible for the entirety of the grant and must repay any portion already paid to him or her.

VERIFICATION MEASURES

In order to verify the information you provide, ESDC/Service Canada may contact you, your employer(s), or the law enforcement agency that completed the PMMC Forms. As part of these verification measures, you may be asked to provide additional information to ensure all eligibility criteria were met for all weeks in which you received the grant. The information you may be asked to provide may include, but is not limited to, evidence that your child was under 18 at the time of the incident and that you are legally responsible for the child. Your employer and/or the law enforcement agency may be contacted to confirm or update the authenticity of the PMMC forms and/or to provide an update on any information stated in the forms. In addition, your EI file may be accessed to verify that EI benefits were not paid during weeks where PMMC payments were made. These measures may be carried out during or after the PMMC Income Support Period. Failure to provide requested information could result in a change in eligibility status and the establishment of overpayments.

PAYMENT SUBJECT TO APPROPRIATION OF FUNDS BY PARLIAMENT

Any amount payable under this agreement is subject to the appropriation of funds by Parliament for the fiscal year in which the payment is to be made and to the maintenance of current and forecasted funding allocation levels for the PMMC. In the event that the Government of Canada cancels this program or reduces its level of funding ESDC may terminate its agreement to pay the grant or reduce the amount of its financial assistance payable under this agreement.

TAXABLE INCOME

PMMC payments are taxable and they must be declared as income for income tax purposes.

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

The recipient acknowledges that ESDC is subject to the Access to Information Act (R.S.C., 1985, c. A-1), and information obtained by ESDC pertaining to this Agreement may be disclosed by Canada to the public upon request under the aforementioned act.

EFFECTIVE DATE

This Agreement shall come into effect on the day on which the applicant is approved for funding by ESDC.
